The city council Wednesday extended the time for paying city taxes until March 21 inclusive. If the extension had not been granted taxes would have to be paid by February 21 to avoid a penalty.

The council also discussed the extension of time for the payment of taxes on the city's bonds. It was decided that these taxes should be paid by March 21, 1935, instead of the date of maturity.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 14.—In response to a telegram from San Antonio and other Texas cities Tuesday, Representative Bee urged the state department to demand from the Mexican government the release of W. W. Adams, kidnapped by bandits at Avila, Zacatecas.

The department again telegraphed to the American embassy at Mexico City and the American consul at Saltillo to use every effort to get the Mexican government to release Adams. A report was received from the embassy that Mexican troops are close to the bandits who have Adams.

SEES MEXICO AT PEACE IN 1921

New York, Feb. 14.—Disordered conditions existing in Mexico will end in 1921, according to Gen. Salvador Alvarado, publisher of El Heraldillo, a Mexican newspaper published in Mexico City. Gen. Alvarado is here having modern printing machinery.

He declared disorder would end because there is a powerful current of opinion through the country in favor of peace. "If the vote in the Mexican presidential election next July is respected," he said, "in this year no war of peace and work will begin, eliminating the main source of trouble between the United States and Mexico." Conditions in the election of Gen. Obregon as president, he asserted.

In his opinion, the United States to follow is that of frank cooperation with its southern neighbor so that they may solve their two great fundamental problems, the betterment of their social and economic conditions, and the attainment of peace and order, so that greater conservation and the splitting of human resources.

EL PASO HERALD TROOPS PURSUE MEXICAN REBELS UNDER TEMPER

Some of his predecessors. He feels that cabinet officers are advisers and underlings who are to give advice and carry it out according to the wishes of their chiefs.

The war has unquestionably had a depressing effect on Mr. Wilson's spirit. Little things provoke him. For instance, on the boat going over to France he took considerable offense because the George Washington carried a number of minor officials of the state department staffs who were not invited to accompany him for this and treated the first two days out at sea, and would not receive the secretary of state simply because his instructions about carrying the number on the boat down to minimum had not been followed.

Just why Mr. Wilson wanted the whole lot to himself people could not understand. Nor was it clear why the president allowed himself to be so much bothered by a company of men on the return voyage, but lots of space in the vessel which was not needed for the troops and was occupied by returning troops.

The boat was only half filled when it started from New York, and only a few of the staff were on board. The body could deduce from the strange demeanor of the president that he was not in a good mood and did not want to be annoyed.

Franklin, official indeed, could be tried to show that the people could not understand why the president allowed himself to be so much bothered by a company of men on the return voyage, but lots of space in the vessel which was not needed for the troops and was occupied by returning troops.

Less Temper on Platform
Twice on the western trip, which he took for the first time since his return from Europe, the president showed his temper. In St. Louis, just as he was about to begin his speech at night, a photographer took a flashlight picture. Now, Mr. Wilson has had that happen to him many times before, but on this occasion he burst out angrily. "We ought not to be taking pictures of me at night," he said, and the crowd, which had been cheering, was silenced.

Again, at Salt Lake, a fortnight later, he was interrupted by a questioner who asked a rhetorical question—the kind that the crowd is so fond of asking. "What is the use of having a president?" the man asked. "Why not have a committee?"

Mr. Wilson, who was in a bad mood, answered the questioner in a very angry tone. "What is the use of having a president?" he asked. "Why not have a committee?"
